Interactive Web Media

At first I had taken the interactive web class just to finish off my design and layout degree but, after taking that first class I really didn't care for it until I did this awesome showcase page, which I fell in love with. I then started to fall in love with designing websites as well as designing for print. Throughout, taking the web classes, I have learned a lot of new things that I probably would have never of thought of learning or even looking at.

When taking the MACA 2880 - Web Design 3 class, I had learned some new and innovative ideas that I would have never of thought of doing. Some of the cool ideas that I learned was bootstrap, the different css3 animation and transitions, and even just dealing with WordPress. I really haven't figured out WordPress yet but, eventually I hope to figure it out a little more one day, I could learn enough in case someone asks me if I know how to use it.

I personally believe if I wouldn't have fell in love with the showcase webpage and Campbell Soup projects that I did in the web 1 class, then I probably wouldn't have taken the time or chance in pursuing the Interactive Web Media degree. I probably would have been done after getting my Design & Layout degree (2015) and just finished school but, I'm glad that I stuck through the countless nights of coding my projects that was due the next day and consist coding errors that make me look closer at the codes to figure it out on my own.
